

How to debrief

As the movement grows, it is important that we learn from our achievements and our mistakes.

A debrief after an action gives us the opportunity to recognise our skills and weaknesses and to develop ourselves both as individuals and part of a team within the movement and our environment.

Although we are taking action for positive reasons, and often come away from these actions full of excitement, joy and energy, taking action can be emotionally heightening and stressful. It is likely that many people will have been running on adrenaline throughout the action. During moments of stress, our unconscious memory is more active. Debriefing can help process these memories and experiences.

After periods of heightened adrenaline, people may also experience a physical or emotional dip, which may leave them feeling unable to communicate, exhausted or experiencing negative thoughts. This is a completely normal bodily response but can feel destabilising and unpleasant in the moment. Debrief can offer a space to share and to get support in dealing with these feelings.

Hot debrief- immediately after the action

It's a good idea to grab as many as possible from the team together to just check in with everyone, share how you're feeling and share gratitude - regardless of how it went. If things went wrong, acknowledge that but don't feel the need to resolve it there and then. You can cover it in more detail during the full debrief when everyone has had some reflection time.

Full debrief- a few days after the action

You may need to debrief different groups separately depending on the size of your action. And it may be appropriate to do these in a specific order to ensure that the feedback easily gets to the right people. For example, if planners debrief before any other groups you might miss some feedback.

If you are able to conduct the debrief in person that is ideal but often, it will need to be online.

The debrief facilitator doesn't need to be a professional and shouldn't be expected to magically fix anyone's hurts. Rather, they should focus on moving the group through the different parts of the session, while taking part in the session themselves. If you are able to have someone that wasn't involved in the planning facilitate the debrief, this can be helpful to allow everyone to participate more fully and may allow any tensions to be managed better.

Note-taking during the debrief can further help the group to look back and see how much there is to celebrate or understand what can be learned for next time. It also gives people the opportunity to add to these if they are unable to attend or have more to add that they didn't share during the meeting. The learnings gathered from the debrief may also be useful to share with other circles and feed into your regional or national team.

Resources

Here are some resources to help you plan and structure debrief sessions. There are two main forms of debrief: our standard one and an emotional one. It is up to you which one fits best for your group and you may even want to do both.

- Simple Debrief - outline for 90 min session with 10 people & 2 facilitators
- Simple Emotional Debrief - outline for 90 min session with 4-8 people & 1 facilitator
- Emotional Debrief - for large groups modification for groups of more than 10 people
- Individual or Buddy debrief template
- Onsite debrief flyer

XR DEBRIEF

Why Debrief?

- Process challenging experiences
- Make sense of what actually happened
- Learn and Grow as a movement
- Develop conflict resilience

Simple structure of debrief:

- Roots - what each person actually saw or heard?
- Rose - what went well?
- Thorn - what didn't go so well?
- Bud - suggestions, learnings, opportunities?

Debrief after any action or event in particular after a major incident

Start and end debrief with a grounding and check-in

A map or timeline can help clarify events. Aim to have a full debrief a few days after the event. Share tensions that might build unless tended to now.

For detailed resources visit tinyurl.com/XRDebrief

Note: This page has replaced the URL at the bottom of this image.